MESSRS. WALTER & STEELE,

Gentlemen,
If you think the following lines, said to be written by the unfortunate " Chatterton" worthy ef a place in your useful paper, you will much cblige a subscriber, by their insertion.

" I LOVE to ken the battle dread, Where arms resound and cannons roar g. To view the wounded warrior brave Sink on the earth to rise no more !

I love to hear the widow's moan, As from afar the views the field; Whose thoughts of danger ne'er intrude, And every breast to terror's seel'd.

Where Mars exults in carnage dire, And ranges o'er the field of blood, Whose varying passions join their pow'r T' encreale, and swell the purple flood :

These are the scenes that yield delight, On these, I could forever gaze ! And when the ftorm of bit le's o'er, Make them the theme of constant praise.

The virgin's and the orphan's cry, Ne'er move Iweet pity in my Since sorrow fits entiren'd within, And rules my heart without control.

Once I was pleas'd with scenes of peace, Where mutual joys forever flow; 'Ere forrow mark'd me as her own, And doom'd me to unceasing woe.

But ah! no more will they return, To yield me pleasure and delight; To forrow I'm confign'd a prey, And thrin'd in everlasting night."

From the Petersburg Istelligencer.

THE ORPHAN.

ON yonder beach, where oft fo drear, The bird of night awakes her moan; 'Midit fands bedew'd with many a tear, And woods that ectto many a groan:

There far from mirth, from pleafure far, The O phan's haples lot is cast; Rul'd by aff ction's darkeft ftar, And beat by fortune's hardeft blaft.

All day along the dreary there Her tender feet imprint the fands, Or hungry at the cottage door, She lifts in vain her trembling hands.

Alas! not youth or beauty's tears Can melt or move the favage throng-In foite of fighs and fobs file hears The revel dance and drunkard's fong.

No mother answers to her call, For low her hoary head is laid, Near to you ancient mostly wall, Beneath the drowfy willow's shade.

And now no more a father's breaft Can oleed for young Lavinia's woes, For all his cares are laid to rest, Deep in the manfion of repote.

Oft when the shales of evening spread And murmuring winds begin to blow, The Ordian seeks the grafs-worn bed, Where fighs in fad fuccession thow.

Alas! the winds may howl around, The brook in forrow murmur by; For nothing yields fo fad a found-So mournful-as the Orphan's cry

LETTERS FROM THE WEST. CHILLICOTHE, AUG. 19.

One regiment of riflemen under It. colonel John Atlen; the Ith reg. of Infantry under it. col. John M. Scott; and the 5th reg. of infantry under it. col. Www. Lewis, have marched from Kentucky to join the north weltern army in Canada. This body of Kentucky volunteers, more than 1300 flrong, are under the command of brigadier gen. Payne. Four hundred regulars recruited in Kentucky, marched at the fame time for the fame point, under the command of col. Wells. A. Uthana, they will form a junction with 900 Ohio volunteers, under brig. gen. Topper; and 100 regulars recruited in Ohio, under capt. Langhum. The whole force will confift of 3,200 men and will make Hull's army 6,000 ftrong-all of which (except about 300 of the 4three, are backwoodsmen. In addition to this gov. Harrifon is collecting a body of troops to compose the Vestern Army, for the purpose of attacking the savage allies of Britain on Lake Michigan and eventually to co-operate with gen. Hull. The diltance from this place to Detroit is at least 230 miles __ 80 of which is a howling wilderness. The land is low and wet, and in many places, for miles together, the mud is deep. Our population is thin and scattered; and our whole western frontier is inhabited by a ferocious, cruel race of favages, who in their lawless incussions spare neither fex, age, or condition. Their enmity is inveterate; and in the formidable league there are faid to be 1200 warriors. Yet with this perfidious race to encounter, with our frontier thus exposed, Ohio and Kentucky have fent nearly 6000 hardy volunteers to the invaproperty and every thing which can be dear to man, to encounter the hardflips of a camp in the wilderness; and the ferocity of lavages and the discipline of British veterans their country. "Why should'th then fear death my fons! The valiant fall with fame; their shields turn the dark stream of " danger away; and renown dwells on their

" grey hairs."
On last Thursday, two companies of Gallia volunteers, under capts. Shepherd and Butler, and one company of Athens volunteers, under capt. Gregory, arrived in town. They marched for Canada on Sunday completely armed and equipped. More hardy, noble fellows never " trod the tented field."—They would have been worthy Rome in her best days. What motive could such men have to leave their families, and their peaceful firelides, but pure patriotism and genuine love of country? The bosom of old Cincinnatus never glowed with a more facred flame than that which glows in theirs. They could have remained at home-they were not compelled to go yet they voluntarily fought in a foreign land, an opportunity to avenge the wrongs of their country, and to acquire that felf-applause which none but a proud patriot can feel.

On Sunday laft, the Deer Creek volunteers upwards of 80 in number, under capt. Mackletrey marched also for Canada. This is the 5th volunteer company from this county, now in actual fervice.

The battle of Brown's-town was fought on the 8th day of August, between a detachment of the 4th reg. and Ohio volunteers, under It. col. Miller, amounting to 650 men, and British and Indians, amounting to upwards of 600. The British and savages were driven upwards of two miles at the point of the bayonet. Our lofs was 17 killed and about 50 wounded. Capt. Ulry, of the Kinickinick volunteers, (from this county) was either killed or taken prisoner. Capt. Bostier and capt. Gilcrease of the Ohio volunteers were killed. Capt. M'Cullouch, of the Ohio volunteers was killed in the first engagement at Biowns-town, wen maj. Van-Horn was compelled to retreat.

Mr. Lyons, the messenger who started from this place femetime fince, was in the late engagement at Browns-town. He has brought a number of letters from the officers and foldiers of the army.

The fecond company of Chillicothe volunteers are at the River Raifin. The force there in the block-house is about 140 effective men. The militia are faid to amount to about 300.

We understand that every preparation was made to attack Malden, when unexpectedly to all, gen. Hull ordered the army to Detroit.

The morning after the battle of Brownstown, It. col. Miller was about to proceed on his march to join the Chillicothe volunteers, when he was ordered back to Detroit by gen. Hull. Col. Miller was then only 20 miles from the Chillicothe volunteers. Time out they the reason, if any there was, why Miller was not permitted ler was not permitted to relieve our volunteers, when the communication was completely opened, and he was within fo short a diftance of them. With respect to the operations in and about Canada, thus far rumour is very buly. The letters of almost every officer and foldier in the North Western Army, are by no means filent on the subject. A little time will throw more light on it, and we may foun feel at liberty to speak more Extract of a letter from James Foster volunteer from this town, to his friend here, dated Detroit, Aug. 8.

The alarming prospect before us, you can have no idea of—horror and difmay has given to every countenance the most gloomy appearance; but a low days ago we landed triumphantly on the shores of our enemy, and now we have precipitately fled under cover of the night to Detroit.

August 10-[Battle ground ] Yesterday col. Miller's regiment of regulars, and about 300 volunteers and artilleifts, who had been ordered to efcort the Chillicotheans from the river Railin to Detroit. were attacked by about 400 Indians and 150 British regulars, who had erected a breast work within two miles of Browns-town ; after a short but very severe and obstinate engagement, the allied enemy were reculfed with a confiderable loss-four British prisoners taken, our loss is about twelve killed and thirty-feven wounded.
